Mosby will stay here until it pleases himself to go home; and is probably staying through it at the present moment to show that American statesmanship is yet not so grossly corrupt as to allow of a man being recalled because he has unflinchingly done his duty. When Mosby does go home he intends, we believe, to practise at the Bar, intense inclination to painstaking analysis of facts and motives, powerful ready-wittedness, complete command of nervous language, tremendous strength of satire, keen sense of wit and saroasm and sledge-hammer-like power of denunciation which he possesses them by looking inexpressibly comic in will all stand him in good stead and lead him on to success. We shall only hope that the era of honesty which he has inaugurated in the American Consular Service here will not collapse through his departure.
